Statesboro, Georgia, Thursday, April 26, 1956

HD short course held April 7 at Reidsville

April 7, the Home Demonstration Council had an all-day short course on home improvement in Reidsville with several counties sending representatives. Mrs. Thigpen was accompanied by six Bulloch county ladies.

The meeting was on improvement of the farm and home planning, native plants in landscaping, and know your house.

T. G. Williams, in talking about use of native plants, named several kinds he used: holly, gallberry, mountain laurel, myrtle, redbud, dogwood, red maples. He stated that "Plan ahead and work to that end, in laying out plans for the home on the farm." He discussed these steps: make a plan, and pasture, poultry, utilities, elevation and drainage, water supply, orientation, roads and drive, view, and routing of work.

Crops in Stilson community are now looking better

By Mrs. W. H. Morris

The crops in this community are, as a whole, looking good. Those who set tobacco late find that the plants came out better than the ones who set early. The late tobacco settings didn't seem to slow up the growth. Sure looks good. The tobacco that was beat-up by wind and sand is coming out very good.

Corn, that looked pretty beaten by wind and sand, has come out, and in general, looks good.

Last week many of the farmers here planted their peanuts. Let's hope they get a better stand on peanuts than they had last year. Due to the dry season the germination of the peanut seed was very poor which resulted in very poor stands in 1955. So, let's hope the season through 1956 had enough rain for good germination this season, and let's hope that each and every farmer will get real good stands and make a good crop. Most farmers came out with a loss on last year's crop and it will take a good crop at fair prices if the farmer is to keep operating. The expenses of the operation of the farm have gone up and up.

GTC's Religious Life Increased Over Past Year

By LAWANA TILLMAN

The religious life and interest among the students of GTC during the present year seem to have increased over the past year.

This year there has been the usual list of students who have no preference as far as denomination and church affiliation are concerned. On the other hand, the local churches have an increased attendance of students over last year. This attendance can be grouped according to the "stable" students (those who can be found in the same church Sunday after Sunday) and those who visit about from one church to another, but are generally found in church somewhere.

This spark of renewed interest in religion may be due to three points: (1) renewed interest on the part of the students; (2) ideas brought from other colleges by transfer students; (3) the enthusiasm of freshmen who have come to college from active participation in their home churches. A fourth item concerning the increased enrollment in GTC might be added to this list as a possible reason for the upward trend.

Another noticeable change is the increased interest in the light held in the auditorium for all students. Not only have more students become interested in attending, but more and more are taking part on the programs.

How Sam Neville developed prize-winning grazing program told

By LAWANA TILLMAN

How Sam Neville developed the outstanding grazing and feed production program in the 27-county Southeast Georgia Agricultural Extension Service district was told this week by Bulloch County Agent Byron Dyer.

Named winner last week of the $1004 district award offered by the Georgia Plant Food Educational Society, Neville is doing an excellent job of producing feed for 412 head of cattle and around 40 hogs, according to the county agent.

Dyer was one of the three judges to visit the district winner's farm to check on the condition of his pasture and feed crops at three different times during the year. Neville first was named Bulloch county champion in the program before competing for district honors. He now will vie with five other district champions of state awards of $300, $200, and $100.

More than 500 acres of Neville's 1,000-acre farm are in cropland, and only only 125 acres are used for permanent pasture to help feed the cattle and hogs. This year he will have an additional 107 acres of coastal bermuda for permanent pasture. Planted last year, the 107 acres were grazed lightly in 1955 in order to get rid of other plants such as crab grass.

A dairyman, Neville's feed production program supported over 240 cows, 120 heifers, and 30 calves during the year. He also kept six breeding animals, around 40 feeder calves and some 40 pigs.

This means that the Bulloch county farmer's pasture program took care of one animal unit per 1.05 acres of land. He found his winter grazing capable of handling almost one animal per acre.

The county judges, fertilizer dealer E. L. Anderson and farmer W. H. Smith Jr., in addition to Dyer, reported the condition of Neville's pasture to be good during all three periods—April to September, October to November, and December to March.

Both county and district judges checked the feeding program for two major qualities—provision for pasture and feed throughout the year, and pasture management and utilization. Under these headings the judges gave points for availability of pasture growth, adaptation of plants, grain production and use, utilization of excess growth for hay or silage, fertilization, rotation of grazing, weed control, availability of feed and water, and other practices.

Most students graduating from the local institution still prefer to teach in Georgia despite the $4,000 salary being offered by these California institutions, but it is a credit to the college for them to look to this school located clear across the nation for teachers.

Dozens of other schools in California have asked for teachers from GTC this year, according to Dr. J. D. Park, director of the personnel office. New requests are received every week. One school recently sent a blanket order for 300 elementary teachers and 250 high school teachers from GTC if they were available.
